Instructional Strategy

What Comes to Mind

What is it?

A quick and easy way to assess the background knowledge, questions, and feelings that students have about topics we're planning to teach.

What are the benefits of using this tool?

Determining what students know, feel, and wonder about a topic before we begin teaching it can prepare us to teach that topic more effectively. With all that we're expected to accomplish, however, finding the time to gather this kind of information can sometimes be challenging. This tool addresses the challenge and makes the pre-assessment process more manageable by providing a fast and no-fuss way to uncover students' thoughts, feelings, and interests. It provides us with a wealth of valuable information, and it helps students activate their prior knowledge--all within a matter of minutes.
